Portfolio Review

Market Commentary for the period ending November 30, 2006

In November 2006, utilities continued to see extraordinary gains and momentum as the Dow Utility Index climbed to another all time high. Treasuries began a mid-summer rally with a 5.24 yield, pushed down to a 4.43, the lowest level since late January of this year. The picture developed into a potential fed easing cycle with a weaker US dollar. The housing market continued its year long slump and is starting to bleed into the employment numbers, fueling speculation for a weaker economy. With the treasury rally however, investors continued to recognize the relative value of DRD (Dividends Received Deduction) and QDI (Qualified Dividend Income) securities vs fully taxables.

The Merrill Lynch Hybrid preferred index moved 1.15% higher again in November, and the Merrill Lynch DRD index was up 1.51% - both higher than October. Preferred spreads continued to narrow and the number of growing call-outs aided the continuing preferred rally. We continue in our conviction that the growing number of retiring baby-boomers will continue to look for strong yield. There is evidence supporting that the growing number of ETF's continue to add utilities to their portfolios in an effort to maximize yield.

Aegon 6.375% was a solid performer for both funds. USB and LEH preferreds were very strong for the month as finance and investment banks maintained gains from an early month surge. Southwest Gas 7.70% was a strong contributor to earnings as natural gas prices continued to enjoy high levels. Other winners were Royal Bank of Scotland, PPL Energy and General Electric. The majority of preferreds gained in the month of November.
